In today's dynamic arts scene, a career in music doesn't have to be limited to the next performance or the next recording session. Opportunities abound in the music business and with major arts organizations, in scoring for film, television and advertising, in behavioral and communications, and in the fast-expanding universe of innovative music education settings and community-based music programming. In step with the changing times, USC Thornton School of Music has revamped its existing graduate programs and is rolling out pioneering new non-performance master's degrees tailor-made for musicians moving beyond the stage. Hear from Dean Robert Cutietta and an expert faculty panel as they discuss outside-the-box avenues for musicians to achieve successful, deeply fulfilling careers.
